Although I'm not a fan of police procedurals, I quite liked this one because in many ways it operated more like a cozy, with a focus on family history and motives, and on opera rather than something like international drug dealing. Superintendent Kincaid and his sergeant Gemma Jones of Scotland Yard are called in because Connor's father-in-law is Gerald Asherton, a world-famous opera conductor, and his mother-in-law, Dame Caroline, is a once world-famous opera singer. I want to read the actual book. I listened to this book on CD. A body turns up in a lock near London, and it turns out to be Connor Swan, who may or may not have been killed before going into the water.
